ide anjournment of the Legislature all at once are more than Charleston can well endure.

Yesterday the resurrected Capital bill was laid on the table on the Senate by a role of twelve to eleven. Mr. Caldwell would take to Mr. Biddle's agent $10,000 in was laid on the table, which was the game of the Charleston men, thus defeating the scheme of removal. It had been discussed in caucus and decided by the friends of removal that the bill, if passed by the Senate, need not go back to the House, so if it could have been passed in the Senate, which might have been ready done had Mr. Caldwell stood dirmly, it would then have been decided that Wheeling was the capitals as provided in the House bild despited of the pressure of the Charleston lobbyists. But then the thing fell through for want of one vote. It is now generally regarded that the question is electually settle, and will not likely be brought up again this session at least.

The whisky bill passed a few days ago, has completely upset the calculations of whisky dealers. I believe there are about forty saloons in Charleston, and to don't think that more than four or five of them will continue the business under how law. A few of them have already that as soon as the bill become a law meantly all of them would do likowate. There is too much risk to run for such a small compensation as would be received in a legitimate ilquor business. The Governor has not signed the bill yet, but of the well to those States. All this did not the holds it longer than five days.

It is a good law; it will no doubt do much towards checking the demoralization that the unlimited sale oil liquor is producing in society. It strikes a hard blow at intemperance and near to its roots. It is unquestionably a grand law, but the will hold the bill in his pocket and let it become a law by default, which it is roots. It is unquestionably a grand law, but the well had the pulled all the wool off of him, but had at last to give him up. Whiley that has been taken away, so I surmais the sound of their old party must go under. "Side that cannot be their old party must go under." "Side than it gloria mundi."

The question of adjournment is not one of uncommon interest among both legislators and people. The members want to go home because they are worn out, while the people want them to go and thus put an end to the kind and class of legislation they have been giving us. It is useless for Democrats or anybody else to undertake to cover up the fact the legislation of 1872 and 1878 has been a failure in nearly every feature. In fact I don't think of but one redeeming bill that they have done has cost the State over one hundred thousand dollars, and I am trank to say that from my stand point of pressure it the structure of world in passing in a five months session and that one is the liquor law. What they have done has cost the State over one hundred thousand dollars, and I am trank to say that from my stand point of pressure the structure of the state over one hundred thousand dollars, and I am trank to say that from my stand point of pressure the state over one would be but faw failures if the form of the state of the state over one hundred thousand to say that from my stand point of the state over one would be but faw failures in the state of the state over one hundred thousand to say that from my stand point of the state of the state over one hundred thousand the state over one hundred thousand the state over one state of the state over one state over one state over one state of the state over one s

There are now three trains each way on the C. & O. Railroad daily. The weather is getting warm and pleasant. Oh yes, I came near forgetting to state that the Senate Committee on Printing, to whom was referred Mr. Walker's ailbered overcharges for the present session, but the leged overcharges for the present session, reported a day or two ago that Mr. W. had not overcharged. They did not examine into the subject at all, and thought that the easiest way of getting rid of the thing was the best. Honest men, think you?

The Panic of 1837 and the Expan-sion of 1873. (Communication in the N. Y. Post.)

The United States Bank, in Philadel-phia (the State Bank), was ruined, with forty millions of dollars of capital, much pina (the State Bank), was Tortice, whith forty millions of dollars of capital, much in the same way. From September, 1836, to about March, 1837, the rate of money for the best paper was from one and a half to two and a half per cent per month. In April following confidence in mercantile paper was nearly all gone, as these ruinous rates of interest were supposed to be enough to ruin those who paid them. As early as February, in 1837, confidence rapidly diminished among merchants, until in March, they nearly all began to talk openly of suspending at once, rather than of being entirely eaten up with extra interest. It was more than suspected that much of the bank capital was discounted to the directors at seven per cent, and they ground it over in the street at the high rates for their individual benefit. All now saw that something must be done to relieve the merchants or a general failure would at once take place.

day or so he gave them words of encouragement, and hope actually revived; and now the farce of "kiting" for relief began,
hat eventually ruined the United States Bank and mainly caused the New York banks to suspend, and ruined nearly all the merchants.

Mr. Biddle proposed that his bank should issue bonds for several millions, in bills receivable—payable in about four of months. Thus, a merchant who wanted, say thirty thousand dolars of the bonds would take to Mr. Biddle's agent $10,000

There would be but few failures if the Stample of the late Amos Lawrence, of not to owe more than twice and a half the amount of the capital—that is, if a mernot to owe more than twice and a hair the amount of the capital—that is, if a merchant has $100,000 capital, he can safely give out notes for $350,000. His idea was, that a man thus situated could generally be carried through the most severe panic.
